Intelligent by design. Governed by principle.

AI is now built into the platforms most organisations already use, from Microsoft 365 Copilot and Gemini in Google Workspace to the agents in Oracle, SAP, Salesforce and Workday. Real work still runs across many tools and data sources. All of it sits under corporate policy, data protection law and developing AI regulation.

The opportunities are practical. A debt recovery team works through thousands of unread emails. An FOI team receives more requests than its staff can read. A finance function reconciles data across systems that were never designed to talk to each other. AI and automation can take on this work today.

SAASiQ identifies where automation and AI deliver real operational value, then designs and deploys solutions within your guardrails. That can mean using the AI already in your platforms, integrating third-party tools, or building bespoke services that run in your corporate tenancy or on dedicated servers.

Every solution is designed with data protection, UK GDPR and corporate policy built in from the start, and is documented and owned by you. Ready-made services for inbox triage, CRM intelligence and document translation each have their own one-pager.
